Today – Showers have remained rather disorganized so far with activity falling apart as it reaches the Monterrey Peninsula. A small window exists for steadier shower activity between 4-10pm, otherwise dry conditions are likely to prevail through tonight. The only other concern is whether the cloud deck lowers to a fog late tonight. Overall, confidence is low in any visibility restrictions. Forecast rainfall: Less than 0.05". Sunrise: 6:51am / Sunset: 7:12pm

Extended forecast – A low chance for a shower will linger into Friday morning, otherwise dry conditions are expected through the upcoming weekend. Marine clouds will occasionally overspread the Monterrey Peninsula each day, especially during the overnight and morning hours each day. Fog is possible, however there are some conflicting signals with this potential.
